Let's hear it for Phil Pollard. nine, count 'em
(9) new members for our Club this quarter.

Editor's Notes: I made the pilgrimage to Orlando and the FUN Show this January. The occasion was the Auction Sale of the Milton Friedberg Fractional Currency Collection...1200 lots. Milt did not have all the Fractional notes, he was missing one to have a complete set of regular issue notes; but he seemed to have everything else.

I also got down to Chicago and attended a portion of the Knight Auction. We left after Indiana, as we wanted to get back to Wausau by midnight. Nationals were bringing sky high prices, especially, I am told, when they got into the Texas collection and the spirit of competition opened up. Kelly's new book on Nationals is out.....

and it's a doozy. Well organized and with new information that includes a census of known large and small size notes for each issuer. Prices seem to be up, as well.

OUR COVER: This Issue we feature an Obsolete Proof Note of the Bank of North America. In our continuing series on National Bank Notes, Doug Walcutt will tell you how this bank resisted changing their title to comply with the new National Banking Laws and Regulations. It was chartered as #602 and retained its original title!

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE: Wally is on vacation and will regale us with a fresh accounting of his exploits in the next issue.

Book Review: Now Available through the efforts of PMCM member Jerome H. Remick is, A Checklist Of Countries Currently Issuing Their Own Paper Money, postpaid for $4.95 US and $5.95 Canadian from Canadian Novelty Coins, PO Box 2111, Station A, Sudbury, Ontario, Canada P3A 4R8. Telephone (705) 566-3545.

The object of this booklet is to provide the beginner with a checklist of the 212 countries currently issuing their own currency. It provides a bracket for check mark purposes in front of the name of the country and information on the monetary unit of that country and how it relates to the US dollar at its current rate. Another table lists states, dependencies, etc. that use the money of another country.

In addition eight pages of text instruct the beginner and provide the names of 9 dealers currently selling inexpensive notes in uncirculated condition. Instruction is provided on how to use catalogues, house notes, and beginners are referred to The International Bank Note Society, should they wish to join an association. Profits go to the publisher, Mr. Remick merely hopes it is of use to novice collectors.

VARIETIES OF NATIONAL BANK NOTES PART ELEVEN

THE EARLIEST NATIONAL BANK TITLES

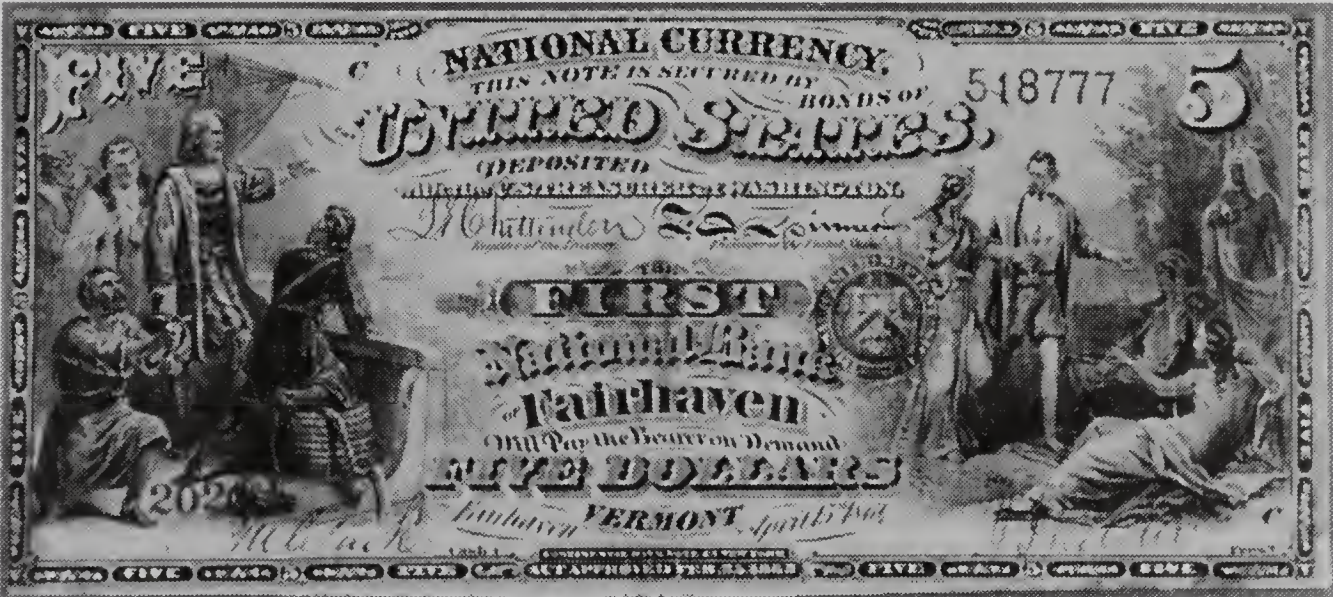

Shortly after the passage of the Act of February 25, 1863, various organizers began associations to form national banks. One of the first steps in this procedure was to apply to the Comptroller of the Currency for the title of the new national bank. At this early time, these new national banks had to have a numbered title such as: First, Second, Third, etc., National Bank. The first 344 national banks chartered initially had such titles.

Since they would lose their traditional and familiar names, many well-established state banks resisted conversion to national banks. One exception was the "Piscataqua Exchange Bank" of Portsmouth, NH. Apparently, very shortly after the passage of the 1863 Act, the directors of this organization decided to convert to a national bank. The bank became "The First National Bank of Portsmouth, NH," and received Charter 19. Also, this bank may have been the first to deposit the appropriate U.S. Bonds with the Treasurer in Washington, as a bank history booklet states that the bank received Treasury Box No. 1. (Portsmouth In The Year 1824, First National Bank of Portsmouth, NH, 1912.)

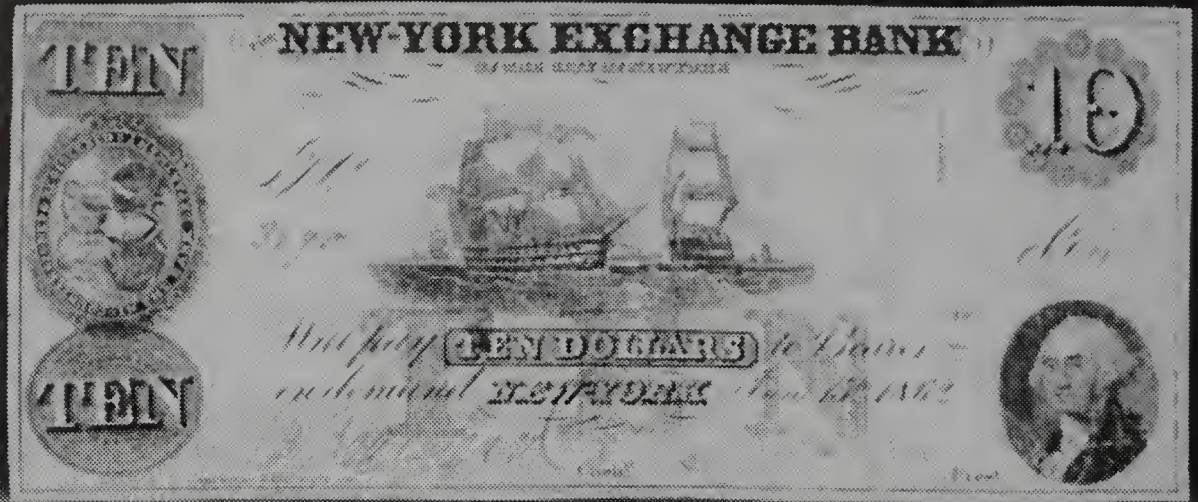

Initially, Treasury Secretary Salmon P. Chase directed that all national banks should bear only numerical titles. Treasury Bulletin Number 8, of July 7, 1863, confirmed this policy. Chase considered this necessary to give these banks a truly national character. Hugh McCulloch, the Comptroller of the Currency disagreed. In his 1888 book, Men and Measures of Half a Century, he stated that there were several requirements that initially contributed to the unwillingness of state-chartered banks to become national banks. One of these was Chase's requirement that state banks had to accept numbered titles to convert to national banks. McCulloch also mentioned that the leading state banks were uniformly against relinquishing their honored names, and that he had no satisfactory reply to that argument.

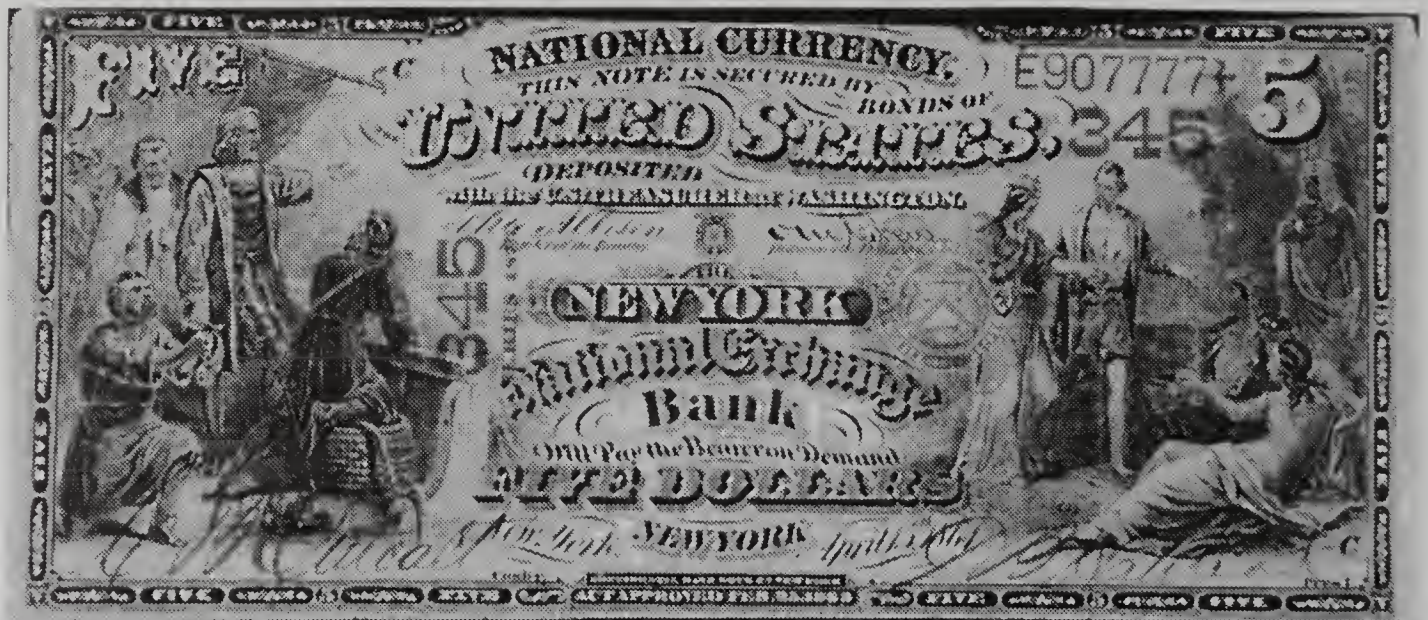

1. An obsolete remainder note from the Piscataqua Exchange Bank of Portsmouth, NH, and an Original Series note from Charter 19.

2. An Original Series note from Charter 344. This bank and all preceding charters initially had a numbered title.

4. A Series of 1875 note from Charter 345, the first bank chartered with a non-numbered title.

3. A post note dated 1840, from "The New York Exchange Bank." Haxby's reference on obsolete notes states that this issue is from a non-existent bank. I have observed several notes of different denominations from this issue of nine-month promissory notes that have all been punch canceled. Also, an 1862-dated obsolete note with the same bank title. Haxby lists this issue of $10 notes as spurious.

In the early Spring of 1864, when he realized that a policy change would be absolutely necessary to ensure the success of the new national banking system, Secretary Chase finally relented and allowed the state banks to join the system by simply adding National to their earlier titles. The New York Exchange Bank of the City of New York, NY," was the first bank chartered that retained most of its earlier title. Upon conversion, this bank became "The New York National Exchange Bank of New York, NY," receiving Charter 345. I have not yet found the documentation that announced Chase's new policy permitting non-numbered titles.

"The Bank of North America" of Philadelphia, PA, strongly resisted adding "National" to its title to become a national bank. Since Congress had originally chartered the bank in December 1781, the President and Directors of the bank insisted that there was no need to modify its name. Ultimately, Comptroller Hugh McCulloch permitted the bank to receive national bank Charter 602 and operate under its original name.

5. An obsolete $1 note from "The Bank of North America, Philadelphia, PA," and a Series of 1875 note after the bank received Charter 602.

THE HIGHER NUMBERED-TITLE NATIONAL BANKS

Only New York City and Philadelphia, PA reached the numbered title, "The Tenth National Bank." The New York City bank received Charter 307 in 1864, while the Philadelphia bank received Charter 3423 in 1885.

6. An Original Series note from Charter 307, "The Tenth National Bank of New York," and a Series of 1882 Brown Back note from Charter 3423, "The Tenth National Bank of Philadelphia, PA."

Except for Charter 4415, "The Ninth National Bank" of Dallas, TX, banks in only New York City and Philadelphia issued notes with a numbered title of "Sixth National Bank" or higher. The Dallas bank issued only 300 sheets of 50-100 Series of 1882 brown backs during the ten months it was open for business between September 1890 and July 1891. In 1916, there was only $100 outstanding on this bank.

7. An Original Series note from Charter 387 in New York City, and a Series of 1882 Brown Back note from Charter 3371 in Philadelphia, PA.

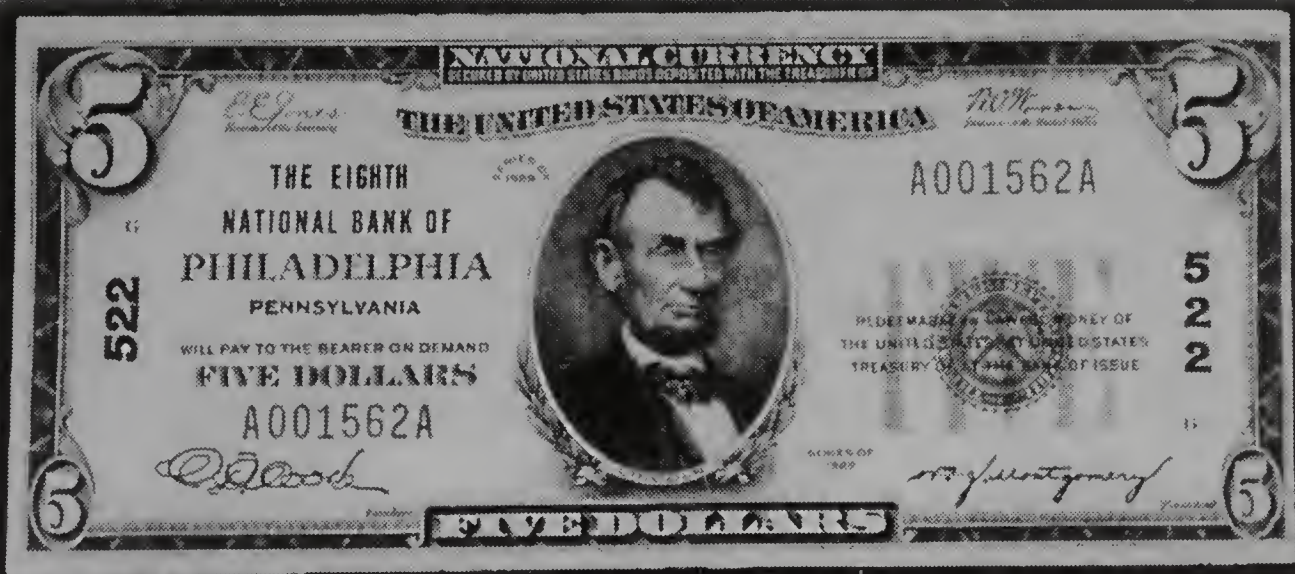

8. A Series of 1882 50-100 proof sheet from Charter 4415, "The Ninth National Bank of Dallas, TX." (Photo courtesy of the Smithsonian Institution)

The only Sixth, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth National Banks that survived long enough to issue Red and Blue Seal Series of 1902 notes were in Philadelphia. Here the Sixth and the Eighth also issued Series of 1929 nationals. There was no Seventh National that issued Series of 1902 Red Seals. All the New York City banks with such titles had liquidated or been taken over by other institutions before the Series of 1902 issues. The Fifth National in New York City was the only bank with such a title to issue Series of 1902 Blue Seal notes. Also, no Fifth National or higher issued Series of 1882 Date Backs or Value Backs.

9. A Series of 1882 Brown Back and a Series of 1902 Red Seal from Charter 522, "The Eighth National Bank of Philadelphia, PA."

10. A small-size note from "The Eighth National Bank of Philadelphia, PA," the highest numbered-title bank to issue Series of 1929 notes. (Photo courtesy of R.A. Kvederas)

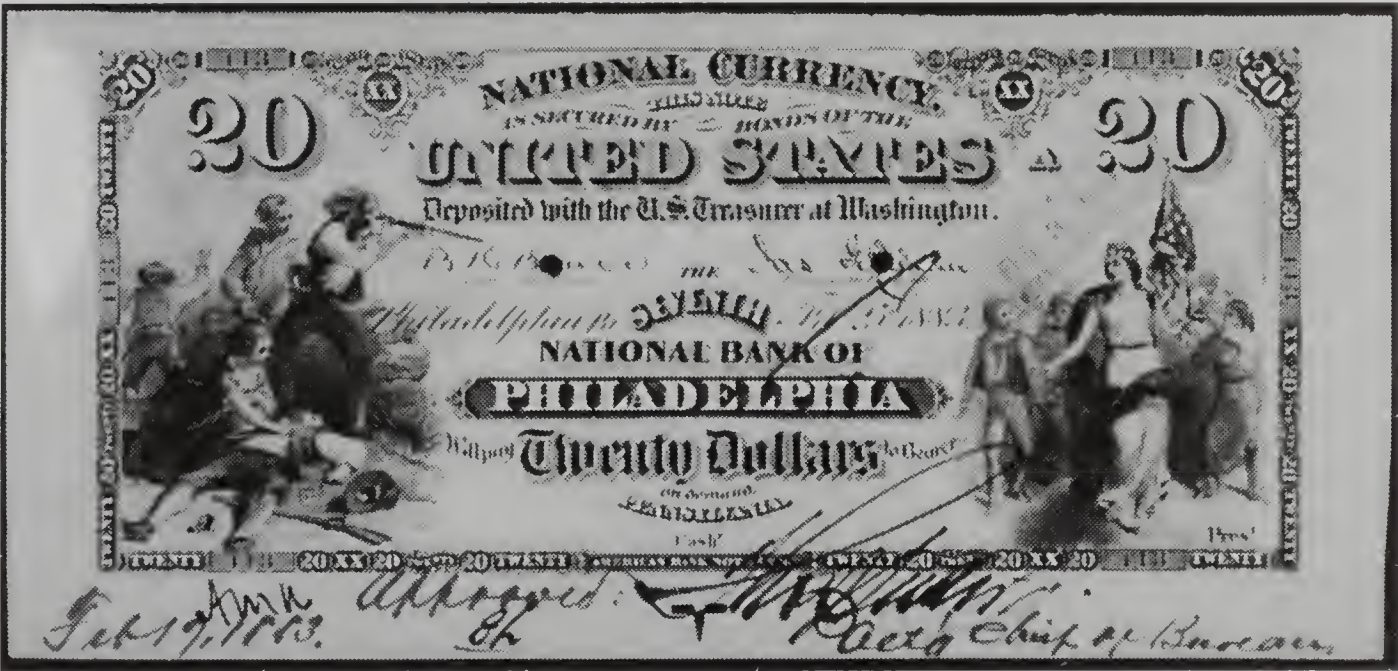

In New York City, there were banks chartered that issued notes with all ten numbered titles. However, both "Seventh National Banks" were originally chartered with different titles. Charter 998, which was originally "The Seventh Ward National Bank" changed title to "The Seventh National Bank" on March 1, 1888. Charter 11844, which was originally chartered as "The Progress National Bank of New York, NY" in September 1920, changed title to "The Seventh Avenue National Bank" on March 1, 1923, and later to "Seventh National Bank" on October 10, 1925. The Charter 998, Seventh National issued only Series of 1882 Brown Back notes before liquidating in 1903. The Charter 11844, bank issued only Series of 1902 Blue Seal Plain Back notes.

11. An Original Series note from Charter 998, with the bank's first title, and a Series of 1882 Brown Back with the second title, "The Seventh National Bank of New York."

12. Series of 1902 Blue Seal Plain Back notes from Charter 11844, with the first title, and the third title, "Seventh National Bank of New York."

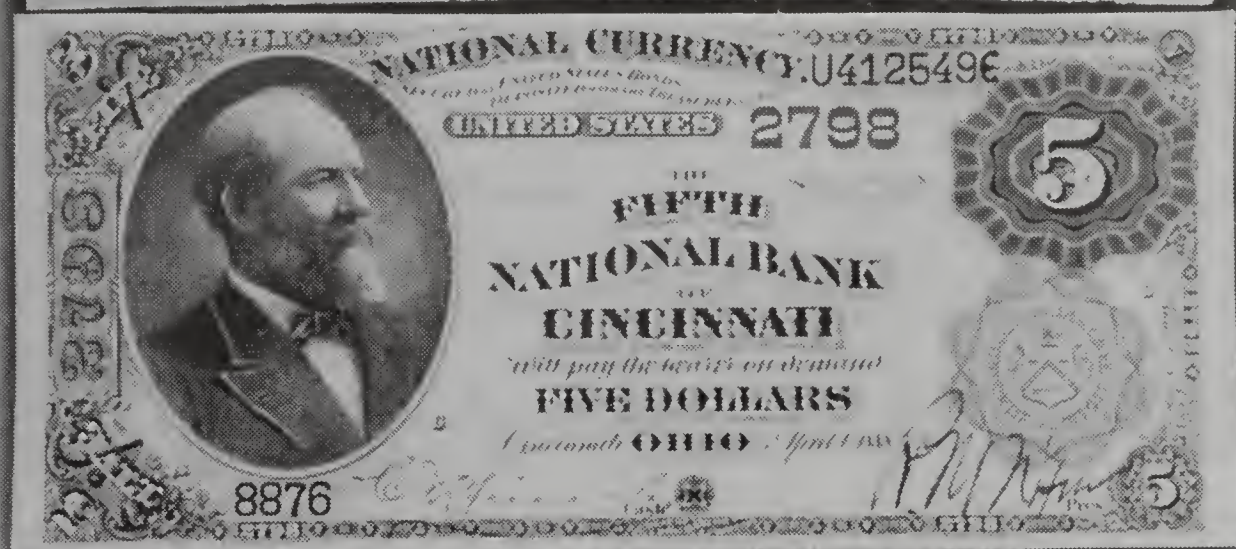

13. A Series of 1882 proof from Charter 413, "The Seventh National Bank of Philadelphia, PA." (Photo courtesy of the Smithsonian Institution)

In Philadelphia, banks were chartered with all numbered titles to Tenth, except for the "Fifth National Bank." Apparently, the Comptroller reserved this title for an organization that began, but never completed the chartering process. In addition, there no known genuine notes on Charter 286, "The Fourth National Bank of Philadelphia," which closed in 1871.

14. Series of 1882 Brown Back notes from Charter 254 in New York City, and Charter 352 in Philadelphia, PA

There were "Fifth National Banks" in eight cities, including Charter 320, in Chicago, IL; Charter 341, in New York City; Charter 1002, in Providence, RI; Charter 1894, in Pittsburgh, PA; and Charter 2798, in Cincinnati, OH, (both after a title change); Charter 2835, in St. Louis, MO; Charter 3488, in Grand Rapids, MI; and Charter 4748, in San Antonio, TX. In Grand Rapids, there was no Second or Third National Bank, while in San Antonio, there were no banks titled First, Second, Third, or Fourth.

15. An Original Series note from Charter 1894, with the bank's second title, and a Series of 1882 Brown Back from Charter 2798, also with the bank's second title.

DISCUSSION

I have found the banks titled Fifth National or higher, to be a very interesting group, along with some of the titles created when state banks converted to national banks. In the latter case, you can occasionally find some unusual pairs of obsolete notes and nationals from the same bank.

16. An obsolete $2 note of the "Bunker Hill Bank" and an Original Series $2 note from Charter 635, "The Bunker Hill National Bank of Charlestown, MA."
